Types of Car Battery Warranties

You need to know the different types of car battery warranties and what they cover. When it comes to car battery warranties, there are two main types: prorated warranties and free replacement warranties. Understanding the differences between these two types can help you make an informed decision when purchasing a new battery for your car.

First, let's talk about warranty duration. Prorated warranties typically have a longer duration compared to free replacement warranties. This means that prorated warranties cover your battery for a longer period of time, usually ranging from 18 to 48 months. On the other hand, free replacement warranties usually have a shorter duration, typically around 12 to 24 months.

Now, let's discuss the warranty terms. Prorated warranties offer a prorated refund or credit towards a new battery if your battery fails within the warranty period. The refund or credit amount is determined based on the remaining warranty period. Free replacement warranties, on the other hand, provide a free replacement battery if your battery fails within the warranty period, with no additional charges.

Defective battery components can cause various issues and may lead to the need for repairs or replacements. When it comes to car battery warranties, coverage for defective battery components is an important factor to consider.
