Uncorking a bottle of French wine on a sunny day, spreading brie on a baguette, gazing out on the Paris skyline in front of the Sacré-Coeur in Montmartre. To me, that's the perfect day in Paris.

Paris is one of my favorite cities in the world thanks to its cobblestone streets, historic architecture, incredible music, savory delicious food, and smartly dressed locals. Paris is a city I just melt into. I love it so much I moved there to live out my clichéd 'writer in Paris' fantasy. (It was everything I wanted it to be.)

But Paris is a city that melts wallets as much as it does hearts.

Paris' plentiful restaurants, bars, and attractions can quickly lighten you of euros if you aren't careful. However, it doesn't have to be expensive. Yes, it's pricey but it doesn't need to bust your wallet. Compared to other places in the world, residents don't take home a high percentage of their salary. As such, there are plenty of ways to enjoy Paris without breaking the bank.

Once you get out of the city center and away from the restaurants designed for tourists, the city isn't that expensive. I found living here to be quite affordable.

Admission to the famous Louvre Museum is free after 6pm on the first Friday of each month (except July and August). It's also free for anyone under 18, and 18-25-year-old residents of the European Economic Area.

Moreover, to avoid the massive ticket lines, enter via the Carrousel du Louvre entrance and you'll get right to the ticket counter. You can skip the lines if you have a Paris Museum Pass, which I recommend getting (see below).

Just keep in mind that there are more people visiting during the free days so you'll want to arrive as early as you can.

Entry is free the first Sunday of the month (reservations required). It's also free for anyone under 18, and 18-25-year-old residents of the European Economic Area. On Thursdays, tickets to the museum are only 10 EUR after 6pm. Regular ticket prices are 14 EUR.

I'm a huge fan of tourist cards, and Paris is one of the best places to get one. There are so many museums and attractions worth seeing that ticket prices can really add up quickly. The Paris Museum Pass will help you save money as it offers free and discounted admission to 60 museums and monuments around the city -- and it lets you skip the ticket lines! Post-COVID, the lines in Paris have gotten really long and you won't want to spend time waiting in them. I always get this pass when I'm museum hopping in the city. It saves so much money and time. I can't recommend it enough.

It comes in 2-, 4-, and 6-day versions costing 70, 90, and 110 EUR respectively. It pays for itself after three museums so if you plan on seeing the main sights, get this pass.
