Curious about the impact of Charge Point Statistics on your electric vehicle charging strategy?

Explore the transformative potential of comprehensive data insights on charging infrastructure, usage patterns, and industry trends. The amount of pollution produced by carbon emissions is no longer an issue to overlook. We only have one earth. The least we could do is to become environmentally conscious and seek ways to preserve it. Across the US, transportation is responsible for 27% of all greenhouse gas emissions; in California, the percentage is even higher, at nearly 40%. The more electric vehicles on the road, the fewer greenhouse gas emissions will be produced

You most likely charge your cell phone or computer often, even if you don't know a lot about the mechanism by which it works. You just plug in the device and go about your day. EV charging is similar because it connects the battery in your car with a power source that can charge it.

Related: Blink vs Chargepoint Partnerships and Collaborations ChargePoint is in a new era of partnerships, creating one partnership after another. ChargePoint is not getting left behind, following Ford and GM's partnership with Tesla. However, Tesla Superchargers being the "North American Charging Standard" is a new thing, and the partnership may have been more initiated by Tesla than ChargePoint. [1]
