This story focuses on the most recent increase in commodity prices in Juba. The data is based on a physical market survey at Konyo Konyo Market.

By Charles Lotara

The market prices of commodities in South Sudan have been unstable since the outbreak of civil war in 2013 when the South Sudanese Pounds started losing value against the United States Dollars.

In August this year, the prices of basic commodities almost doubled after truck drivers declared strike over rampant insecurity along the Nimule - Juba Highway, the only major route that connects South Sudan to the rest of East African countries.
