September 2018 -- Following years of living and working in Germany, Fadil Hoxha returned to his homeland of Kosovo in 1999 after the country's devastating war.

"The economy was not functioning at the time, and everything had to start from zero," he said.

Seeing a clear business opportunity, Hoxha started importing drilling machinery to produce the raw materials needed for post-war reconstruction. After spending time abroad, Hoxha was eager to do something good for his country. But when the time came to pay his electric bill, he received a real shock.

"The electricity price was so high that I was forced to go and consult with [the electricity company] to see if it was a mistake. In fact, it was not a mistake."

Over the past several years, energy costs in Kosovo have been rising, and power outages have become routine as the country relies on aging coal-fired power plants -- and highly polluting, non-renewable lignite coal reserves.

An expensive electricity bill did the trick to spur Hoxha to provide an alternative form of energy. "I was home with my son, and I said to him that we will be the first ones to open the first solar company," he said.

True to his word, in 2015, Hoxha and his business partners drew up a plan, and within 10 days, they had bought a factory and started preparations for Kosovo's first photovoltaic solar panel production company, Jaha Solar.
