What's the best piece of advice you could offer a car buyer?

That said, depreciation is the single biggest cost of buying a new car, so it's worth considering buying nearly new or secondhand, as this means someone else will shoulder the often steep loss in value that happens in the first couple of years.

What's the best car you've ever driven?

I've always had a soft spot for sports cars, and while I love the Porsche 911, I prefer the Cayman and Boxster because they're smaller and more affordable, but just as much fun. You're guaranteed many hours of enjoyment from either one of these.

The best car I've driven in my long career was a 1952 Frazer Nash Mille Miglia. It's an open-top, two-seater racing thoroughbred, much of which is based on the legendary BMW 328. It not only looks gorgeous with long sloping wheel arches and a long bonnet, it goes like stink too.

What will the car market look like in 20 years?

I think buyers will have a choice of pure electric or hydrogen-powered vehicles. The former will be more suited to short, urban journeys and the latter for long-haul trips or high-mileage drivers. The current trend towards having the use of a car rather than owning it outright will continue, with the vast majority of people getting used cars on personal contract purchase or subscription deals.

Most car sales will be completed online, and the few remaining new car showrooms will become "destinations" with a focus on entertaining people as well as informing them about brands and models via interactive media. While petrol and diesel cars will be banned from cities, I'm hoping their use won't be too restricted as I want to keep driving my 1995 Mazda Eunos.

EV owners with Wallbox chargers told us the installation process was excellent, and that the majority of their chargers hadn't developed any issues. Eighty percent of problems were fixed without charge, and the other 20% cost EV owners ?100 or less. However, only 40% of problems were sorted out in a week or less, and 60% of customers had to wait up to 30 days to have their charger working again.
